

London Free Press

Sept 1, 2007

Letter to Editor

UNLESS otherwise noted, these letters are to be considered unedited. The opinions expressed in the letters and comments are those of the writers and not of The London Free Press.

school board

Reader says one school system would be best

John Tory's announcement to push for school funding for any religious group should be viewed with extreme caution. If his plan becomes a reality, any and all religious groups, if they followed provincial standards, would become eligible.

Our existing funding for both the public and Catholic boards becomes stretched at times and will only get worse if this funding is encroached upon by others.

My question to Tory is, where is all this money coming from? With all the promises being made by politicians, it can only mean financial ruin for this province. We live in a country of people from all over the world with as many religions and beliefs. Are we now going to segregate children instead of integrating them so that they can experience everybody's customs and religions.

We need one school system that we the taxpayers can afford. Leave religion at home, churches, etc. where it belongs. Let the children integrate in one system in order to learn and enrich their overall educational experiences.

POSTED BY: G.A. Harris, London

POSTED ON: September 1, 2007

EDITORS NOTE: As published in The London Free Press on Sept. 1, 2007