Thousands waiting in line

School funding fight escalates

Sept. 24

In principle, John Tory almost has it right in regard to equal funding for faith-based education, except for one little oversight. The claim that there are only 52,000 students to accommodate is significantly understated when one considers the thousands who are waiting in line to get into faith-based private schools but cannot afford the cost. Why not just eliminate all public funding for religion and make it an equal playing field for everyone?
