Not all Catholics hold same views on funding

Catholics will fight proposal

Letter, Sept. 25

I have always disliked reading letters from anyone who claims some authority to speak on behalf of a large group. That is precisely what Bernard Murray did, introducing himself as the mouthpiece of 650,000 students and 2.4 million Catholic ratepayers across the province. No group as large as Catholics are homogenous, and to suggest that they speak with one voice is insulting and disingenuous.

I am a young adult who received a Catholic school education. My property taxes support the local Catholic board. However, I happen to agree that the state has no business funding religious education and would much rather see Ontario eliminate this funding for the Catholic faith than extend it to all faiths.

With all due respect to Bernard Murray: You don't speak for me. Please stop claiming to.
